

Resident Doctors' Day 2026: Felicity Williams - Taupō

Dr Felicity Williams shares what she values about rural hospital medicine, the Taupō community and working as part of a close-knit team.

Dr Felicity Williams

I am a rural hospital medicine registrar at Taupō Hospital, having moved here with my husband and daughter at the start of 2025.

I enjoy the generalist nature of rural hospital medicine and being able to help with a broad range of patient needs at all stages of life - from a newborn emergency in the birthing unit to an acute issue in ED, inpatient care or seeing someone in our outpatient clinic.

“Sometimes I care for the same patient during multiple parts of their journey. This can be really satisfying, as it provides opportunities to see progress and get to know them as a person.”

I also love being part of a small team, particularly the great team we have at Taupō Hospital.

“It is really special working alongside people you get to know well. There is a genuine sense that we are all in it together, caring for the wider community that we are also part of.”

Before starting rural hospital medicine, I completed a diploma in tropical medicine over several months through the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, based in East Africa - specifically Tanzania and Uganda. Before that, I completed a diploma in obstetrics and medical gynaecology.

I have an interest in developing-world medicine, and I believe rural hospital medicine offers many transferable skills for working in resource-limited environments.

Taupō is a beautiful place to live and the town has a great deal to offer, particularly for somewhere with a hospital small enough for us to work as rural generalists.

“We love spending time together as a family by the lake and often end up at the Two Mile Bay Sailing Club for coffee or an ice cream on a nice day. We still have a lot to explore around the lake and, now that my exam study is hopefully behind me, we are looking forward to getting out there.”
